city, and anxions to know why London and New York and Philadelphia and other towns could not be made like the French capital. Now Rhe French themselves are criticising Now the French themselves are criticising the municipal administration of Paris, and from the second given of it in a recent number of their leading Review, our people can get some useful hints. With a population approaching 2,590,000, less than a third are matives of the city, for it is a central pairt for skilled workmen and men of all pursuits for skilled workmen and men of all pursuits. from far and near. It has about 80,000 houses housing 1,000,000 of its working population. While Landon has more than 300 building as-sociations, with over a 100,000 members, Paris owes its new touses mainly to large speculative corporations, which look more their own profit, sked out by long terms of exemption from taxation, that to the health or comfort of the workingmen. Even the imand 1,200 combines and horse cars, and 13, 000 private carriages, there is still complain of a want of cheap and convenient means transportation to the growing suburise. The great omnibus company, in return for an ex-clusive privilege lasting until 1912, and at prices fixed by law, pays to the city hair a million of dotlars annually. The gas and water companies are also private corporations, with long terms of exclusive right to supprising the city; and they pay over five millions of dollars annually into the city treasury. Water is scarce and gas is dear, as compare with supply and prices in other Europe. spitals, but in spite of suits brought by the ir the companies hold to the letter of their mirracts and refuse to meet the growing demand for a concession in the interest of the consumer. Paris has a police force counting over 11,000 men in its service, and the annual arrests made average 10,000, of which num-ber 20,000 are old offenders, and 3,000 are trangers.
